Loucks had secured a roll of small wire, and wrapping it around his neck a number of times, stepped upon one of the iron bars of his cell and fastened the other end of the wire to the upper bar of the cell. He then let himself down, having succeeded in tying the wire high enough to pre-vent his feet reaching the bottom of the cage. He was completely suspended in the air and when Mr. Lever arrived the unfortunate fellow was pack in the face. A fellow inmate of the jail aided in rescuing Loucks from his perflous situation.

The man would make no statement why he attempted the rash act.
